

How we can support you

Social workers can provide support to patients in a range of areas:

- Social casework services for patients and their families who are experiencing personal, emotional, health and environmental problems. This may include assessing the psychosocial functioning of the patient and/or the family/carer.
- Enabling patients and their families to utilise government and non-government agencies by providing appropriate referrals to such agencies.
- Assisting patients and their families to make adjustments to illness or disability, and in having an active involvement in their medical treatment.
- Working along-side healthcare teams to provide discharge and aftercare support.

What we do?

Social workers are dedicated to improving the health and wellbeing of individuals, families and the community. We assist people by helping them cope with issues in their everyday lives, deal with their relationships, and work with their personal and family problems.

We can assist you in dealing with the emotional and practical issues that may arise because of injury, illness, disability or transition.
